Since, its inception, Photoshop has been the top graphic designing software throughout the world. It is a graphical and multimedia tool for the user to make vector graphics, images, and other artistic designs. With the evolution of time, the Photoshop Image Center and Photoshop Portable Collection have changed into Photoshop CC.

Adobe Photoshop is also the no 1 web and graphic designing tool of that time. It has some of the best and a number of stuff as some special features, so now I am going to share the top features with you: In the latest version of Photoshop CC, there are some incredible new features in it, such as the ability to create paintings with blur, the blurring of heavy layers, the feature of point by point, and more. There are powerful new ways to blur vector and halftone patterns and artboards. Adobe has added new artboards, which is the most suitable for beginners. With the previous version of Photoshop CC, you can also apply the Golden Ratio effect, but it cannot be achieved with the new version. In version 13, the users can generate an unlimited number of artboards and easily resize, customize, and add to the lists with the new artboard feature. You can easily access any image and enhancements have been made in the mask section. The rendering engine has improved so that the colors look more vibrant and brighten up the images.

Adobe Photoshop features a number of brush caps that can be set to either apply to new strokes or to an existing selection. The biggest 'brush cap' we will be covering in this tutorial is the Gradient Tool Cap, which allows you to apply a gradient to your brush, so you won't need to have a separate gradient as well as brushes. You can even apply gradients to different areas of the selection – so, in our example, we'll be applying the gradient to the top half of the new selection (as shown in Step 2). Step 1 - Hover your cursor over the top half of the window and click with your mouse to select the area of the window that you're working on. Step 2 - This will create a new layer for the background of the image, and we will want to clean up all the areas we just selected. Layer / Layer / Delete Steps 3 - Now we need to decide how we want to apply the gradient to this new layer. Let's click and drag the gradient tool in the toolbox and apply the gradient using the same parameters that we used when last adding a layer. Step 4 - Now we can select the top layer and start the new selection. Looking at the top, we can see that it's only the top half of the layer that we're working with. Using this new selection we will start to crop the image. The parameters on the Gradient Tool will be the same, so we will simply be using the same settings. Step 5 - Now we need to get the camera position to be in the upper left if the image. Click the green image view and drag it to the upper left. This will place the camera directly above the top half of the image. Step 6 - The Gradient Tool will be a little different than it was last time, so we'll need to reposition it. Click with the topmost canvas to bring up the Gradient Tool (as shown in the bottom screen shot). Click with the topmost canvas to activate the Gradient Tool. Click with the topmost canvas to bring up the Gradient Tool. Click with the topmost canvas to activate the Gradient Tool. Fill any areas that were previously selected with white on the newer top layer. Convert the top layer to Soft Light. Delete the left and right layers. All that's left is the top half of the original image, which we now need to clean up.
