Screaming Monkey put out an updated version of its Mac application, called Documents to Go 8, that works as a virtual drive and offers to import documents and other files into Photoshop, Illustrator, InDesign, and other apps. This still requires a better-than-basic Mac operating system, and you will still need a Mac computer to make use of the application. This application brings back the image editor of Age of Innocence in a new and totally welcome light. It also includes what Adobe has called "social editing features." On the surface, these are a series of tools for managing online communities of photographers to boost their feedback.
